they be laid on the table a return describing all the land in the Gwydir district dedicated, or proposed to be dedicated, for General Burial Grounds.

The Obscene Publications Suppression Bill, and the Betting Houses Suppression Act Amendment Bill, were respectively read a third time, and passed.

The Maitland Cattle Driving Act Amendment Bill was read a second time on the motion of Mr. Cohen, passed through committee without amendment, and reported, the date for the commencement of the Act being made the 1st May, 1880.

The House then went into Committee, on the motion of Mr. Johnston, to consider the resolution for the erection of a bridge over the Myall at Bulledalabah.

Mr. JOHNSTONE hoped the Government would agree to the motion, as the bridge was wanted, and would be a public convenience.

Mr. LACKY opposed the motion, as he said it had been shown by the reports of no less than three Government officers that the bridge was not required, and that it would cost at least £3000.

The Committee divided, and the votes were ayest 17, nays 17, and the Chairman gave his casting vote with the ayes, in order that an opportunity might be given for the further consideration of the question. The Committee then reported progress, and, on its being moved that the report be adopted, the House divided, and the motion was negatived by 18 to 16.

The House adjourned at 25 minutes past 7 p.m. to 4 p.m. on Tuesday next.

Mr. BUCHANAN's Bill for laying down the law as to the punishment of contempt of Court in certain cases was snuffed out last week in a somewhat contemptuous manner. The hon. member could not get a single vote besides his own in its favour. Perhaps he has himself to thank for this. He is so confident at all times of the utter folly of everybody who opposes his views that it is becoming rather a hazardous thing for any one who has a reputation for sound judgment to lose, to take sides with him. There was a man in Bedlam once, who, in describing his position to a visitor, said that he found all the world mad, but all the world held that he was mad, and he had accordingly been outvoted. Mr. BUCHANAN would probably often cut a better figure on division lists, if he were not so ready to assume that all the reason is always on his side, and that not a scrap is to be picked up on the other. The position is such a singular one to take that it is not surprising he should so frequently be left to luxuriate in it singly.

It is, however, a pity that questions of public interest should be prejudiced by such advocacy. What was the object of this bill, as set forth in the title? It was "to provide that contempts of Court should in certain cases be punishable only as indictable offences," that is to say, after trial before a Judge and jury, and by penalties within fixed limits. That was a very good and desirable object to seek, and one which the House might well have approved, in principle, without committing itself to the adoption of the bill bodily. Amendments in points of detail might have been made without sacrificing the principle; but the hon. member has in effect pronounced against the principle, either for want of consideration, or under the influence of a sort of panic, because the bill was introduced by the hon. member for Mudgee.

Mr. WISDOM refused his support to the bill, and advised the House not to assent to it; but at the same time he appears from the report to have admitted to a certain extent the desirability of some measure of reform pointing in the same direction. "He was not opposed to some restrictions being placed on the powers of the Judges." He acknowledged that "The whole question of contempt should be dealt with in a thoughtful manner." He was quite willing to admit that in certain cases (of contempt) Judges should not have power to deal with them summarily." And he remarked that "Commitment did not necessarily mean punishment." Now the bill proposed to limit the powers of the Judges; its second reading would have left it open to Parliament to deal with the question of contempt in a thoughtful way; it proposed that the Judges should not have power to treat "certain cases" summarily, and left it to the House to say, as a matter of detail, what cases should be included in the list; and, as its very title showed, it was intended to define the law as to punishment for contempt, and not as to commitment. Mr. WISDOM's opposition, so far, disclosed no sufficient reason why the bill should be summarily rejected.

The strength of Mr. WISDOM's opposition lay in the argument that the bill was based upon a false assumption; although according to his own admission this alleged falsity did not render it wholly inexpedient or undesirable to take some action in the matter. We are under no mistake, it seems, as to the powers of the Judges; but still it would be well that those powers should be restricted. A great error has been made as to the power of the Judges to inflict summary punishment; but yet there are cases with which the Judges should not have power to deal summarily. It was not quite complimentary even to Mr. BUCHANAN to argue the matter in this fashion, when he was asking the House to affirm the very principles set forth by Mr. WISDOM himself. But passing this by, let us see what this false assumption is, and in what way it bears upon the case. It is "in that a Judge could punish contempts of Court summarily without giving the person charged an opportunity of defending himself, or of explaining his conduct." Two years ago this question was discussed in the House of Representatives of New Zealand, upon a motion for the appointment of a commission to inquire into the powers of the Judges, because of their arbitrary action in directing Mr. BARTON, a barrister, to be imprisoned for a month for contempt of Court. It was then said in support of the motion that, according to authoritative ruling, "The Court of Assize can commit a person arbitrarily for contempt, without rule or record, and that no other Court, the House of Commons, or House of Lords, or other Court, can review that decision. There is absolutely no appeal whatever for a person who is committed under the arbitrary power claimed by the Judges." On the other side, the motion was opposed on the ground that inquiry was unnecessary, because the powers of the Judges were well known; but the Attorney-General, by whom that argument was used, made no attempt to show that those powers were less than they had been represented to be. On the contrary he quoted from Lord DENMAN to show that when the question was whether the conduct of a prisoner amounted to a contempt of the Court, "this question it was the unfortunate duty of the Court to decide itself, as party and judge;" and from Baron POLLOCK to show that it is not even necessary to set out in the warrant for commitment the cause with the particular circumstances. So recently as 1872, in GOLIFFE'S case, Chief Justice COCKBURN said, "It is very true that it is laid down by high authorities, and it is according to the reason of the thing, that every Court of Record has power to fine and imprison for contempt committed in the face of the Court, while the Court is sitting in the administration of justice."

An authority quoted in the "Encyclopaedia Britannica," lays it down that "if the contempt be committed in the face of the Court, the offender may be instantly apprehended and imprisoned at the discretion of the Judges, without further proof or examination." When the offence has been committed outside, and an attachment is issued, the effect is to bring the accused into Court to answer, upon oath, interrogatories put to him, and to be then fined, or imprisoned, or discharged at discretion.

"This method of making the defendant answer upon oath to a criminal charge," says BLACKSTONE, "is not agreeable to the genius of the common law in any other instance." This remark would be considered by some a sufficient comment upon Mr. WISDOM's statement that the person accused of contempt has always an opportunity of defending or explaining his conduct. The accused is not simply offered the chance of self-defence; he may be interrogated, with a view to his conviction. The argument would be valid as a reply to Mr. WISDOM; but we do not lay much stress upon it, because, on general grounds, the interests of justice would often be served by receiving evidence from the accused. The point to be noticed is this. The opportunity for defence or explanation does not meet the objection that in proceedings for contempt the Judge may be prosecutor, judge, and jury, and in a certain sense may exercise the combined functions in his own case. Of course, he may disavow all personal feeling; but he may therein deceive himself, and the danger lies in the possibility of such self-deception. When it is urged that charges of contempt, like charges of murder, ought to be tried before a jury, and that the accused should have the opportunity of defending himself before a jury in both cases, it is no answer to say that in cases of contempt the accused may defend himself before a Judge without the check upon the Judge's action which a jury affords.

Commitial, says Mr. WISDOM, does not necessarily mean punishment. Very true; but that is a reason why there should be special legislation to distinguish between the two, and to cause a formal trial to intervene before punishment, whilst establishing on a well-defined basis the Judge's power to commit. The power of committal may be necessary to secure the uninterrupted transaction of the business of the Courts; but the need for a power of punishment without trial, under the name of a committal, does not follow. It will hardly be denied that this power has been frequently exercised. Mr. BARTON's case, before referred to, is one illustration of it. A more recent instance Mr. WISDOM will remember, in a case before a District Court Judge at Tenterfield, when a man, instead of being committed for trial on a charge of perjury, was committed to prison (and to punishment) for contempt of Court, and which was tried in the Jury Court before his Honor Sir William Manning and a jury of four. No verdict was given in the plain court, with damages £250. In the District Court His Honor Mr. Justice Fawcett and a jury of four commenced the trial of the case M'Kenzie v. the Union Fire and Marine Insurance Company of New Zealand, for damages for breach of agreement and wilful dismissal.

The Supreme Court yesterday, his Honor Sir William Manning presided in the Jury Court. The action, the Newcastle Coal-mining Company v. J. and A. Brown, for breach of an agreement to supply 50 iron coal-waggons, was settled; the defendant consented to a verdict for the plaintiff, with damages £850 and costs as between attorney and client. In the case of Degener v. Bennett and others, an action for damages for an alleged libel, which appeared in the "Telegraph and Country Journal" of the 20th of July last, and which was tried in the Jury Court before his Honor Sir William Manning and a jury of four, no verdict was given in the plain court, with damages £250. In the District Court His Honor Mr. Justice Fawcett and a jury of four commenced the trial of the case M'Kenzie v. the Union Fire and Marine Insurance Company of New Zealand, for damages for breach of agreement and wilful dismissal.

The only remaining case to be tried at the present sittings of the Central Criminal Court came on for hearing yesterday morning, before His Honor Mr. Justice Vindey, when a man named William E. Johnson, alias "Babes in the Woods," was sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment for breaking and entering into a house, and was remanded to the Infirmary, where his wounds were attended by Dr. Brown.

The Czar may in more senses than one be said to be living over a mine. Six weeks ago we received the intelligence of an attempt to blow up the train in which he was travelling. Happily this only succeeded in derailing a luggage train which had been sent on in front. Now, however, not only has the scene of operations been shifted nearer home, but the success achieved by the conspirators has been greater, we may say more horrible. Although the Czar has himself escaped thirty of the Imperial Guards have been wounded and five killed, and this by the explosion of a mine beneath his own dining-room in his own Winter Palace. The telegram may well say "most providentially" the Imperial family were not assembled in the hall at the time, but the Czar cannot expect Providence always to interfere in his behalf. "Providence," said NAPOLEON, "always fights on the side of the strongest battalions." On this principle conspirators must be far harder for the Emperor ALEXANDER who has inherited despotism and has to rear where others have sown. Apart from continued repression there are two distinct forms for him to adopt. He can either grant important reforms in the Constitution, or he can additionally make war to subdue his enemies.

Apart from continued repression there are two distinct forms for him to adopt. He can either grant important reforms in the Constitution, or he can additionally make war to subdue his enemies.

The Czar may in more senses than one be said to be living over a mine. Six weeks ago we received the intelligence of an attempt to blow up the train in which he was travelling. Happily this only succeeded in derailing a luggage train which had been sent on in front. Now, however, not only has the scene of operations been shifted nearer home, but the success achieved by the conspirators has been greater, we may say more horrible. Although the Czar has himself escaped thirty of the Imperial Guards have been wounded and five killed, and this by the explosion of a mine beneath his own dining-room in his own Winter Palace. The telegram may well say "most providentially" the Imperial family were not assembled in the hall at the time, but the Czar cannot expect Providence always to interfere in his behalf. "Providence," said NAPOLEON, "always fights on the side of the strongest battalions." On this principle conspirators must be far harder for the Emperor ALEXANDER who has inherited despotism and has to rear where others have sown. Apart from continued repression there are two distinct forms for him to adopt. He can either grant important reforms in the Constitution, or he can additionally make war to subdue his enemies.

NEWS BY THE ENGLISH MAIL,
VIA SUEZ.

Owing to an interruption of communication on the Western Australian telegraph line, we did not receive until yesterday our telegraphic summary of news brought by the P. and O. Company's steamer Tanjore, which arrived King George's Sound on Thursday morning. The line was restored yesterday, and we received, through Reuter's agency, the following summary of news brought by the Tanjore:

ALBANY, THURSDAY.

The Tanjore, which arrived here at 5 o'clock this morning, brings London dates to January 15.

The Duke of Marlborough, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, has arrived in London to confer with the Secretary of State respecting the condition of the country and the adoption of measures for the preservation of peace, which is now seriously endangered.

The danger is now confined to districts where distress prevails in the west of Ireland, where it is constantly apprehended that some sanguinary conflict will take place.

The lawless movement which has followed the land agitation shows indications of concert and design. Without some extensive and elastic organization it would not be possible, in wild and desolate districts sparsely inhabited, to bring together such large masses of men and women, and to assemble them at any given point. They are collected from remote localities and meet at an appointed place and time. The position they take up and the tactics they follow—being put in the front—are regarded as proofs of a systematic plan made by leaders who do not themselves come to the front, but arrange the new campaign against property.

Every indication exists that Fenianism has supplied and organized the tactics resorted to. The body of people operating are equipped with every requisition for making organized demonstrations. Lawlessness is increasing rather than diminishing, and shows a tendency to spread to the southern part of the island.

Arthur Orion's application for a writ of error is based on a contention that the several terms of penal servitude to which Orion was sentenced ought to have run concurrently and should not be made to follow one another. A further point, purely technical in character, was that the sentence was informal; the statute under which Orion was convicted provides that a person found guilty of perjury may be sentenced to seven years' penal servitude, in addition to any term of imprisonment to which he had become liable at common law. Orion's case is that the several assignments (arrangements) of perjury against him relate substantially to the single offence—that he falsely represented himself on oath to Sir Roger Tichborne. Further, that if he could have been sentenced to separate terms of penal servitude on two counts of the indictments against him charging him with the same perjury at different times and places, he might have been sentenced, supposing the sentences were cumulative, to any number of years of penal servitude. That the law having provided that seven years' penal servitude should be the maximum penalty for perjury, it could never have been contemplated that the term should be extended at the discretion of the judge who presided over the indictment, and the judge who imposed sentence, to an indefinite number of years, far exceeding in all probability the remainder of the convict's life.

On the other hand, it was contended that the crime of perjury is one admitting of many degrees of heinousness, and that the maximum penalty is frequently inflicted for offences which are insignificant as compared with those of the claimant. While admitting that it would be within the range of technical possibility to wrest the law to oppressive ends by means of multiplicity of assignments (arrangements of perjury) and cumulative sentences for them, this is not an instance in which anything of the kind has been done.

An application was made at the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin, on the 18th, on behalf of Mrs. Bagot, for one month's postponement of the trial of the issue directed by the Court of Probate, on the grounds that Mrs. Bagot was too ill to attend the trial. The application was strenuously resisted by the plaintiff's counsel, but was granted by the Court.

The New York World states that the contract between De Lesseps, Bonaparte (?), and Wyse allows De Lesseps two years more for the organization of the Canal Company in connection with the Isthmus of Panama. Wyse is to receive one million francs on the formation of the company, and four millions francs one month after half the stock shall have been subscribed, and also five millions in stocks. De Lesseps requires everything which has been granted to Wyse by Columbia, and, in the event of De Lesseps's death, his son succeeds to his rights.

Lord Derby, on the 8th instant, at the Hindmarsh Chamber of Commerce, exhaustively reviewed the commercial position of the country, his conclusion being that England had not yet got up to the point where material progress could and does begin.

He pointed out that England was no worse off than her neighbors, all countries having shared in the depression of the last few years.

His lordship declared that the people of England had lost ground economically, and that the foreign trade had no sympathy of diminution. He combated the statement that the whole world was shutting out English trade by protective tariffs, and did not believe the colonies would. Definite experiments with protection must end in failure and disillusion, which had already begun to operate in Victoria. The colonists are perfectly loyal, but they remain so on account of an understanding that they shall do exactly as they please. All the talk therefore of a great Zollverein is simply inapplicable to the conditions under which we live.

Sir Stafford Northcote, Chancellor of the Exchequer, attended a Conservative meeting at Stroud, and spoke at some length respecting the general policy of the Government, addressing his remarks in reply to Sir Harcourt and Mr. Gladstone's recent deliverance.

He took a hopeful view respecting a revival in trade, and warned the meeting to beware of false nostrums, such as a return to protection or turning out the Ministry. He stated that the Government had decided to make advances of loans in the distressed districts of Ireland at a nominal rate for the first two years, and subsequently bearing interest at 1 per cent. In this they had endeavored to do what was right.

In this they had endeavored to do what was right, and would ask Parliament for a Bill of Indemnity.

The First Lord of the Admiralty, Mr. W. H. Smith, spoke at a dinner of a Conservative Association, Sutton, district constituency of Southampton, in defence of the financial and foreign policy of the Government. With respect to Afghanistan, he said it was the "de" re of the Government to avoid annexation as far as possible, but certain points must be held, and perhaps some slight deviation would require to be made from the terms of the treaty of Gundamukhi. Mr. Smith declared that any compromise with the Irish Home Rule party was impossible.

Serious riots have occurred in Peshawar, arising from a duel with pistols, in which Baron Rathenau seriously, if not mortally, wounded Deputy Verhoray, a journalist. The populace took the part of the latter, because Rathenau was alleged to be unfairly disregarded the rules of duelling. Nightly turbulent demonstrations began at the National Casino Club of Peshawar. On the 17th the soldiery of the Police used the people very roughly while dispersing them, thus still further exasperating popular feeling. Riots have occurred every night since. Every precaution to preserve peace with the military and police has been taken. Shots have been fired on the military, and several persons killed and wounded.

A foreigner named Alexander Scloss entered the Roman Catholic Church of St. Peter, at Hattoon Gardens, and fired five shots from a revolver, at the priest celebrating mass. The ball damaged the altar ornaments, and the priest remained uninjured. Scloss was only cured after a desperate resistance, and has been committed for trial. He says he is a Swiss priest, but is believed to be a German socialist.

The affair of Dr. Koller and the Mullah Tewfik, who assisted him in translating the prayerbook into Turkish, has been satisfactorily arranged, and Dr. Koller's names returned to him. The Mullah will be sent to the island of Chio, where the population is Christian, in order to protect him from Moslem fanaticism. Sir Henry Layard originally demanded the dismissal of Hafiz Pacha, the Minister of Police, but the Sultan himself assuming the sole and supreme responsibility the demand could not be persisted in. It has just been announced, however, that Hafiz Pacha has been invited with the Grand Cordon of the Order of Medjidie. The German ambassador strongly supported Sir Henry Layard throughout the affair.

The French Chambers responded on the 13th January, when M. Gambetta was re-elected President of the Chamber of Deputies by 259 out of 308 votes which were recorded. Seventy Republicans refrained from voting; and the extreme Left virtually voted against Gambetta. It was at first doubtful whether he would accept the Presidency; and he only notified his acceptance of the position yesterday (January 14th). M. Clemens, an extreme radical of the Jacobin type, is supplanting Gambetta in the favour of the Parisian working classes.

The Invalid Russ, a semi-official journal, denies the alleged concentration of Russian troops on the Polish frontier, and the reported Russian armaments. It says that on the contrary Russia, in December, reduced her army 34,000 men below its nominal peace footing; and that further reduction and other pacific measures are in contemplation.

The new French Ministry have inaugurated their succession to power by sweeping changes in the personnel of public functionaries. General Sauret, the Minister for War, has replaced all the heads of the departments under his control by officers of ascertained Republican sympathies, and the same system has been followed in other departments.

Relying to a report that the German-Government viewed the Freycinet Ministry with disfavour, it is said semi-officially at Berlin that Germany avoids interference with the internal affairs of France, and respects French independence. Germany solely desires peace. It is nevertheless believed that Germany will narrowly watch the drift of French affairs and the views of the warlike aspirations of the Gambetta party.

The directors of the North British Railway Company have resolved to apply to Parliament for powers to enable them to rebuild the Tay Bridge at a lower level and with a double line of rails. The search for the bodies of the victims of the catastrophe still continues.

Out of 74 persons killed, the bodies of 27 only have been recovered. A more careful examination of the girders than has yet been practicable is required in order to ascertain the precise cause of the calamity.

A German Consul-General is to be appointed for Australia at a salary of 29,000 marks, in consequence of the increase of German commerce with and the emigration of many German merchants and artisans to Australia. Though he will first establish himself at Sydney, the new Consul-General will in all probability fix his ultimate residence in Melbourne. Consuls are to be appointed in the chief towns of Australia, and also at the Tongan and Samoan Islands.

LATEST NEWS FROM AFGHANISTAN.

BOMBAY, JAN. 31.

A proclamation was issued by General Roberts on re-occupying Cabul, offering pardon to all who might tender their submission, with the exception of five individuals specially exempted by name, as having borne a principal part in the late disturbances.

General Gough's brigade has been quartered for the winter in the Bala Hisar. Supplies for the men are abundant, but fodder for the horses is extremely scarce.

Some of the cavalry have in consequence been sent back to Gundamuk.

A few skirmishes have taken place along the line of communications, but General Roberts continues master of the situation.

Later-advises state that Mahomed Jan, assisted by Ghulam Hyder, will shortly attack Cabul, the latter furnishing twelve regiments of infantry and twelve thousand horse.

It is reported that Ayooob Khan has quitted Herat and is making his way to Ghuznee, through the Hindu Kush.

Everything points to a renewal of fighting in February. The British forces are being largely reinforced. Troops are continually moving forward from Bombay to the front. The total force from Bombay ordered for active service, and for the front it requires, about 15,000 men and 65 guns.
